ABSTRACT

First, the Accounting Education Change Commission encouraged academics to get students more active in the learning process. Most recently the American Institute of CPAs has called upon accounting educators to work with various teaching styles to allow students to learn more process skills. Then we had all the scandals with Enron, Global Crossing, et al. The politicians were busy legislating morality and ethics with Sarbanes-Oxley. Now, the National Association of State Boards of Accountancy is proposing drastic changes in accounting education for non-AACSB accredited universities. We believe that accounting programs may be experiencing subject proposal overload. This paper promotes discussion about accounting curriculum changes.
